

Letters from Alexander Graham Bell to Mabel Hubbard Bell, from June 23, 1907, to August 4, 1907, with transcript

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL TO MABEL (Hubbard) BELL Beinn Bhreagh, C. B. At House-boat. June 23, 1907. Dear Mabel:

Mr. Bedwin leaves tomorrow for New Glasgow with damaged engine. Laboratory funds are reduced practically to zero awaiting your return. Think you better give him cheque for $500 on Laboratory account — until we can arrange for a larger amount to credit of Laboratory.

Better attend to this right away as Mr. Bedwin may need to draw upon his account here.

Having a glorious time here. Paddled down by moonlight about midnight. Went to bed at 5:30 A.M. Wakened up at 1 P.M. today and found Bedwin here. Will return in time for supper. Would prefer to be here alone till then — unless you come.

Your loving, Alec.

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL TO MABEL (Hubbard) BELL Beinn Bhreagh, C. B. Sunday, August 4th, 1907. Dear Mabel:

Largelamb is having a beautiful time. He has been out of doors all day gathering in his crops — and is now engaged in the promising operation of thrashing his grain. He won't eat any of it, however, so don't be afraid of poisoning. Largelamb will go to bed at dark and get up when the light wakes him, and be on hand for McInnis in the morning. I hear the Selfridges have returned so we might have another Association conference tonight — but I think it may wait until tomorrow and not deprive Largelamb of his weekly outing. With love.
